Learning outcomes

This course examines the more practical and pragmatic aspects of anthropological theories and methods. We will focus on the nature and structure of inquiry, theoretical paradigms, modes of operations and various means through which we conduct analysis. Our aim is to turn theory and methods into tools that can be used practically in the field, cognitive tasks, literature-based research and during the writing process. To reify the classroom, discussion-based presentation of information, we will go into the field to conduct a semester-long research project during which you will have the opportunity to employ, practically, the skills and techniques that make up the anthropological toolkit.
